Who is... Katherine Johnson?

Katherine Johnson studied maths and worked out the trajectory of planes and rockets which eventually helped the Apollo 11 space mission go to the moon.

She is widely considered an unsung hero in that time in America.

She was very intelligent that she was able to attend secondary school a year early at the age of 10! Myla

When working with NASA in the 1960s, women were given the jobs that were thought of as being 'boring' - calculating the maths necessary for space travel. Ador.

Actually, without the calculations that Katherine and her female colleagues worked on, landed on the moon would not have been possible. Ari.

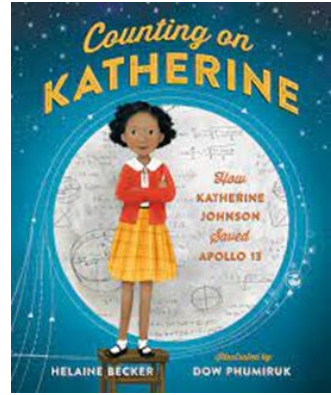

John Glenn, a star astronaut, only trusted Katherine's calculations for his Project Mercury Missions. Surie.

5M

She had a love of maths which her teacher Miss Turner realised and supported her to improve and complete more challenging work. Nawal

Katherine Johnson is similar to Malala - both faced difficulties in their education and careers because they were women who were treated differently to men. Muna

At first, Katherine's job prospects were limited to teaching or nursing, the NACA (which became NASA) started employing women. Taylan.

5R

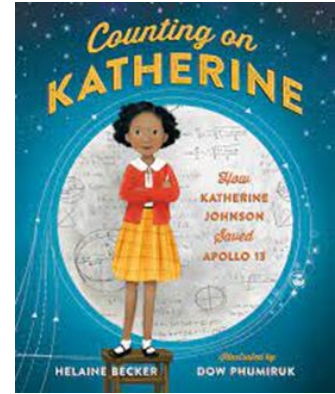

She loved school, but could not go to the high school near her because she was black. So her family had to move.

Katherine Johnson was an amazing Mathematician and she was one of the first black women to work for NASA.

John Glenn was an astronaut who didn't want to go into space unless he knew that Katherine Johnson had done all the calculations for the mission.

When Apollo 13 was in trouble Katherine Johnson made some calculations so that the astronauts could use the moon's gravity and shoot the spaceship like a slingshot back to Earth.
